INVITATION TO THE COURSE

'THE CHALLENGES OF SECURING MARITIME AREAS FOR THE EUROPEAN UNION: A FOCUS ON THE INDO-PACIFIC REGION'

(Activity Number 22–23/36/1)

Brussels, 3-5 April 2023

location: A. Borschette Conference Centre, 36 rue Froissart, Brussels

The French Institute for Higher National Defence Studies (IHEDN) has the honour to organise, within the European Security and Defence College (ESDC), a course entitled 'The challenges of securing maritime areas for the European Union: a focus on the Indo-Pacific region'. This course will take place in Brussels from 3 to 5 April 2023.

The European Union, bordered by four seas and the Atlantic Ocean, has a significant maritime potential and establishes itself as a global maritime security provider, as attested by the first EU naval operation, the EU NAVFOR Somalia. Ongoing since 2008 and renewed until 2024, the operation ATALANTA deter, prevent and repress acts of piracy and armed robbery off the Somali coast.

In a context of increasing threats, the European Union has strengthened its role in the field of maritime security not only in its immediate vicinity but also in more distant regions, firstly, through the reinforcement of regional and international cooperation and, secondly, by means of developing an integrated approach involving:

- the adoption of the Integrated Maritime Policy (IMP) which, among other things, emphasises the principle of 'blue growth/economy' and
- the revision in June 2018 of the European Union Maritime Strategy Security (EUMSS) action plan.

These policies and strategies underline the importance of maritime security in order to protect EU strategic interests, in a constantly evolving security environment. With that in mind, EU maritime security policies and strategy centre around the following objectives:

- securing the rule of law at sea and freedom of navigation;
- strengthening cooperation with relevant international organisations, EU partners and third states;
- reinforcing operational coordination between EU Member States and also between EU agencies and institutions (interagency coordination);
- consolidating external border control at the European level and
- ensuring the protection of common natural resources, in the context of climate change, while assessing the future challenges it might pose as regards maritime security.

In this context, the Indo-Pacific region has become a major issue for the European Union regarding its maritime objectives. As a matter of fact, the shift of the geopolitical focus to this part of the world has required the EU to adapt its global strategy. The creation of a common Indo-Pacific strategy in April 2021, with a specific part regarding maritime issues in the region, highlights this interest. The EU also supports the security of maritime routes thanks to the CRIMARIO programme, which has been extended in 2020 to the South-East Asia (CRIMARIO II). This stability is crucial for the economy of the EU, when 40% of the goods imported by the EU Members States are coming from the South China Sea.

This course will deal with the challenges of maritime issues for the European Union with a general perspective, with some focuses on the Indo-Pacific region as a background.

The course is open to civil servants and military personnel from EU Member States and EU institutions and agencies, and more particularly aims to prepare participants to effectively take positions on maritime security policies, strategies and missions/operations at European level. This course will also allow attendees to become acquainted with institutional, legal and operational issues related to the implementation of the EUMSS.

The course will consist of an e-learning preparatory module and a residential seminar in Brussels, which will be held from 3 to 5 April 2023, both parts of the course being mandatory.

It is therefore with great pleasure that we invite you to this course on the 'The maritime security challenges for the European Union: a focus on the Indo-Pacific region'. You will find below all the details regarding the registration process for this course.
